

First Seminar on University Cultural Heritage, March 18-20, 2015, University of Havana, Cuba

The University Cultural Heritage Department of the University of Havana, with the co-sponsorship of San Gerónimo de La Habana School, invites to participate in the First Seminar on University Cultural Heritage, to be held in Havana from March 18-20, 2015.

Universities have accumulated along their history a wide and varied cultural heritage, both of material and immaterial nature. Historical properties, movable property, museums, artistic and scientific collections, rites and traditions, make the universe of values that higher education institutions show. Universities have actively participated in intellectual, social and cultural transformations in their respective societies, building identities and processes of true significance. The University, as a spiritual asset, is in itself susceptible of protection in the scenario of the theory of contemporary heritage preservation.

At world level management experiences associated to university heritage are abundant. It has in no few cases high protection levels at national and regional scale. However, methodological approaches to the concept of “university heritage” are not enough developed. This includes lack of specialized management structures as well as difficulties for interchange and cooperation. In the case of Cuba, it is an unprecedented meeting that urges the establishment of a scientific platform, guaranteeing the preservation, dissemination and updating of a live, cardinal and changing heritage.
